What does the colour codes at the admission portal mean?

- The colour codes at the admission portal are always to be read in connection with the status codes, which you will see prior to the little coloured dot. The status codes describe the exact status of your application.

While the application is being processed, the status shows a yellow dot. When we are done processing your application, the colour will change to either green or red. Green means that you meet the entrance requirements. Red means that you do not meet the entrance requirements, nor do you have qualifications equivalent to the entrance requirements.

The status of my application is still "yellow"

- We are processing the application as fast as we can, but as we receive many applications, you do have to expect a certain amount of time for the processing procedure.

If you meet the entrance requirements, your application status will change to green. This does not mean that you have been accepted to the program. You have not been accepted before you receive an e-mail stating you have been accepted.

If your application status changes to red, it means that you do not meet the entrance requirements nor do you have qualifications equivalent to the entrance requirements.
